This year marks the anniversary of the end of women's inability to vote in U.S. elections. In 1920, the United States enacted women's suffrage. Today, women's voices – and their votes – are shaping political discourse more than ever before; but others, including many immigrants and refugees, do not have a say in policies that dramatically impact their lives.

Join us as we explore the courage of women, what we have learned from the past hundred years, and the ongoing struggles of the movement for women's empowerment.

Refreshments will be provided.
